The Dwight D. Eisenhower School for National Security & Resource Strategy

Private Sector Fellows Program

The Eisenhower School

The Dwight D. Eisenhower School for National Security and Resource Strategy is one of five colleges within the National Defense University. A Department of Defense (DoD) Senior Service College, the Eisenhower School combines a fully accredited Joint Professional Military Education and a graduate level degree to deliver premier senior executive leadership education for the development of strategic leaders and the integration National Security Strategy and resources.

Mission

The Eisenhower School prepares select military officers and civilians for strategic leadership and success in developing national security strategy and in evaluating, marshalling, and managing resources in the execution of that strategy.

The Private Sector Fellows Program

The Private Sector Fellows Program is a unique DoD program authorized by Congress that allows for a select number of private sector civilians working in organizations relevant to national security to receive an education at the Eisenhower School. The school's mission is to create strategic leaders with a detailed understanding of the defense industrial base and its impact on national security. Our goal is to promote public-private sector interaction and understanding in order to develop the relationships needed to guarantee the collective defense of our nation.

The Industry Studies Program provides an experiential learning opportunity by allowing students to interact with senior leaders in both government and private industry.

Why the Eisenhower School?

Mr. Chet Huber, Class of 1995, former CEO & President, GM OnStar, current Senior Lecturer, Harvard Business School: "This school honed my leadership and critical thinking skills, enabling the transition into senior leadership roles in my company."

A Unique Experience

General (Ret.) Colin Powell, Admiral (Ret.) Mike Mullen, and publishing CEO, Mr. Steve Forbes: National Defense University attracts the most influential leaders in government and industry, who freely discuss real-world problems in a non-attribution environment.
